

Al Cunningham
E-22600
July 13, 2013

WHAT WERE YOU THINKING?

Good intentions are not always the best planned, nor produce such expected results. Impulsive reactions can have negative effects and circumstances which can inadvertently change the conditions of your immediate existing environment.

As we advance in life we learn the limits of our abilities. Ignore your limitations and you reduce your future opportunities to alter your state of mind.

I question the rationality of your intentions against the subsequent results. Explain and show me the logical benefits you experienced that I might tend to understand the method of and in the intentions of your madness. Would you repeat it again?

From a concerned friend.

AL CUNNINGHAM

Dedicated to Jeff Hawkins